

Kaeli Miller

Kaeli Victoria Miller grew up and attended school in Monroe, Louisiana. She, from a young age, had a passion for art. Her school had art classes but she was never really taught technique until college at Harding University. She will be graduating in May 2018. She started out in Graphic Design and then switched to Fine Art, but feels that graphic design background will help her later in life. She is also acquiring a minor in International Business. With her major and minor, she hopes they will benefit her with getting into grad school so she can teach high school art. She would also like to be a professional photographer as a side job and eventually a career. A photographer that she looks up to is Jeremy Cowart because of his heart for the oppressed and poor in the world. Cowart is an inspiration as a photographer, not just because of his famous clients, but because of his photo journalist projects.

When looking back at why she wanted to be an artist, her first thought was how much she wanted to capture the beauty of God's creation. Whether it be landscape, people, or things, photography was how she wanted to do it. Photography was always a part of her life. When she was younger she would babysit her siblings and their friends, she would have them dress up and perform photo shoots. While she is currently getting deeper into portraits, her show encompasses her nature works. The photographs are from her trip to Europe which included Italy, Spain, France, and England.